

Is Stabal the Netflix of Christian music?

A brand new streaming platform offering exclusive on-demand content.

We live in an increasingly impersonal and disconnected world. We have phones attached to our fingers and an all-you-can-eat buffet of information and entertainment. Social interaction, learning and shopping can all be done online without any face to face contact. Yet, the same technology that tempts us to be so disconnected from one another also opens doors for a much deeper type of connection. Stabal is filling up the digital space that's at everyone's fingertips with music, films, stories and the highest-quality creative content that inspires the mind, feeds the soul and has eternal significance.

Is Stabal the Christian Netflix? In more ways than one. Smooth user experience? Check. Hours of content available instantly? Check. Original content? Check...although Stabal's original content is worlds apart from Stranger Things or Birdbox. Stabal is about music. It's about stories. It's about personal connection and depth and learning. It's about using creativity and technology to create a space where viewers are enriched and artists are championed.

IS THE PLATFORM FOR ORIGINAL,
ON-DEMAND CHRISTIAN CONTENT.

Stabal's video archives offer hours of intimate live music sessions, unique story telling experiences and exclusive interview content that builds up an online community of artists and audiences who are searching for more than just a pre-made playlist of songs. Once you're in, it's hard to pull yourself out of this mesmerising world. Kick off with global worship anthems from a live music session with John Mark McMillan, followed by a laid back and personal podcast with Guvna B, then discover new music with the talented duo Drakeford, and finish off with an episode of Round the Table where worship meets grime as a panel of artists from around the world tackle questions like 'how real is the divide between the sacred and secular music scene?'

It doesn't even stop there. There is so much more...
